

FACEBOOK, TWITTER AND SOCIAL NETWORKING CONTENT

Law Schools are using social networks to communicate with people seeking news and information. Schools may turn to LinkedIn to provide professional networking opportunities, several schools post updates on Facebook, and an increasing number of schools are posting instructional videos and recorded events on YouTube. On a more basic level, some schools may have more fundamental social networking communities for students to share directory information, find pictures of classmates or just talk to one another. Following are examples of the ways a selection of schools choose to advertise these networks on their homepages.
